

A List of Possibilities in an Uncertain Order

Dogs live knowing how to live; they defy Kierkegaard.

Lighthouses may well still be useful.

God is likely tired of being God.

If you wait long enough, the shadows . . .

Despite what they say, it can be good to take a nap longer than twenty minutes.

Rain that never falls is still rain.

Amen is the only way out.

Honeysuckle, like love, grows anyway.

Etudes could well be beautiful when played on a kazoo.

The lyricism of early morning often arrives unaccountably.

“A List of Possibilities in an Uncertain Order” reprinted from Practicing to Walk Like a Heron by Jack Ridl. Copyright © 2013 Wayne State University Press and reprinted with their permission.